

Structured Interview Compliance Guide

Synthetic training material for a local demonstration. Apply the organization's approved process; this document is not legal advice.

Consistent questions

Use a shared set of role-related questions, the same time expectations, and consistent follow-up prompts for applicants to the same role.

Interviewers may ask neutral clarification questions but should not coach one applicant more than another.

Document any material deviation and its reason so a reviewer can judge whether evidence remains comparable.

Job-related criteria

Map every score to a published essential duty or rubric criterion; avoid vague impressions such as culture fit or confidence.

Use work samples and structured examples that reflect actual role tasks and provide reasonable, consistent instructions.

When a criterion cannot be tied to a role requirement, exclude it from the recommendation and flag it for human review.

Accessible interviews

Offer a consistent channel for candidates to request an interview adjustment and refer the request to an authorized human reviewer.

Assess the essential skill while allowing an appropriate way to demonstrate it; do not treat a request or adjustment as negative evidence.

Keep accommodation details restricted to authorized personnel and out of scoring notes unless directly necessary for the human process.

Evidence notes

Write concise, factual notes: question or task, observed response, criterion, score anchor, and source.

Separate a candidate's words or demonstrated work from the evaluator's conclusion; avoid unsupported labels.

Correct records through the approved audit process, preserving who changed what and when.

Human review

AI output is a draft for assistance. It cannot approve, reject, or execute a consequential screening decision by itself.

A reviewer checks the cited role evidence, rubric fit, fairness flags, and missing information, then approves, edits, rejects, or escalates.

Only an authorized reviewer may execute an approved outcome; rejection must not create a final screening decision.
